

The Weekly Ferrets Magazine Newswire - May 4, 2009

Lost Ferret: H1N1; Microchips; Ferret Shelter; Ferreting; FerretStore.

Posted: May 4, 2009, 10:15 p.m. EDT

Lost Ferret In Wrexham, United Kingdom

The owner of an albino ferret is hoping to find it, reports the Evening Leader. Read Now>>

Ferrets And The Flu

Ferrets might not be good models to determine how H1N1 spreads between humans, reports Science Insider. Read Now>>

Ferrets To Be Used In Development Of Flu Vaccine

Some drug makers will shift to producing a vaccine for the new H1N1 flu, and it will be tested on ferrets, reports Reuters. Read Now>>

United Kingdom Lab Set To Analyze Flu Vaccine

The National Institute for Medical Research in London will analyze the effects of H1N1 flu on laboratory ferrets to develop a vaccine, reports BBC News. Read Now>>

Ferret Owners Being Urged To Get Microchips

An increase in lost ferrets prompts RSPCA employees in the West Midlands, United Kingdom, to advise ferret owners to get microchips for their pets, reports Berrow's Worcester Journal. Read Now>>

Ferret Shelter In Utah

For more than three years, The Ferret Cubby Shelter has helped ferrets find homes, reports Herald Journal News. Read Now>>

Ferreting In The United Kingdom

Two men explain how they catch rabbits using ferrets, reports the Western Daily Press. Read Now>>

Ferreting In Australia

An 83-year-old, retired teacher in Australia helps local farmers by using ferrets to catch wild rabbits, reports the Herald Sun. Read Now>>

Former FerretStore.com Owners Sell Web Firm

The former owners of FerretStore.com recently sold their web design and e-commerce firm, reports CitizensVoice.com. Read Now>>