

Rabbit Tales

Owners share their experiences living with pet rabbits.

"Fluffy likes to crawl in tight spaces to discover new areas. In this photo, he went behind our curio cabinet and laid down to escape being caught by the kids — and the camera!"

— Chandra Rigda of North Carolina, owner of Lop Fluffy

"I was packing to go home to California over the summer and he knew that I was leaving, so he was hopping into my suitcase and in my drawers — and then he hopped behind my books."

— Kris Stephens of Illinois, owner of Mini Lop Theodore

"Teddy's main hobbies are cuddling and eating. The moment a hand touches his head he drops to the ground and takes on the shape of a large chocolate sausage. Sometimes he looks like a turkey. He is very well-behaved for a rabbit. He comes when I call his name — although we think he associates his name mainly with food. He isn't the most gracious jumper and suffers from vertigo. My boyfriend, Giovanni, and I love him like crazy!"

— Sabine Heinlein of New York, owner of Harlequin Teddy

"Much of Lambert's daily routine consists of playing hide-and-seek in my curtains, jumping off the living room couch and jumping on my back. He is extremely lovable and grunts when he does not get his own way."

— Linda Pinkans of New York, owner of Lop mix Lambert

"Baby is actually a very shy rabbit. She's notorious for hiding behind or under furniture to keep from being caught."

— Chandra Rigda of North Carolina, owner of Dwarf/Dutch mix Baby

"He's a very personable little rabbit. As for the name Napoleon, I've always been a big fan of Napoleon. Here he seems to be saying 'I'm emperor of the world.'"

— John Domingues of Maryland, owner (along with Lara Roman) of Holland Lop Napoleon

"She's just real curious, mischievous. She loves to go under and behind things. I've had her about six years. She's got real sweet eyes. She just loves to be petted."

— Karen Williamson of Wisconsin, owner of Mini Lop Honey
